MORTAR POINTING

Fretting mortar is a common problem for brick homes built in Western Australia. A process where mortar between brickwork begins to 'fret' or fall away. Fretting is caused by the action of salt migration through brickwork. Water, which has salt dissolved in it, migrates through brickwork to its surface.

RISING DAMP

Rising damp is a form of dampness that occurs, particularly in older buildings, when groundwater rises up through walls, floors and masonry, via capillary action. Capillary action is the ability of a liquid to flow along narrow spaces, counter to the forces of gravity.
